President to Sign Bill Devaluing Dollar, Taking Gold Supply

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3. (AP)—President Roosevelt will sign the devaluation bill at 3:30 p. m. eastern standard time today, and probably move to take over the nation's gold supply.

The mechanical difficulty of taking over the gold supply is being solved by the Federal Reserve System in cooperation with the Treasury. The bill authorizes the Federal Reserve Board to take over the gold supply and to devalue the dollar by 30 percent, and establishing the stabilization fund.

The first objective is getting the national gold supply into control of the Treasury. It was kept in question form as a basis for currency issues.

When this operation has been completed, the President will issue a proclamation fixing definitely the value of the dollar in terms of gold. This value will be 35 and 40 percent of its previous gold content in accordance with the new law which was requested by the President.

Mr. Roosevelt then will have a profit in gold of more than two billion dollars, resulting from the devaluation of the dollar. He will use two billion dollars of this for a stabilization fund to use in steadying the dollar in foreign exchange and for other purposes.

The Secretary will have authority to buy and sell gold in foreign exchange and to buy government bonds in the domestic market.

Just how soon devaluation will be accomplished was uncertain, but it was believed at the White House it would be done today.

President Roosevelt Deluged With Birthday Greetings Today

Telegraph Greetings Estimated at 150,000 and Birthday Cards Calculated at 100,000—Will Talk Over the Air Tonight at 11:20—6,000 Balls Will Be Held Tonight to Celebrate the 52nd Birthday of the President.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 3. (AP)—President Roosevelt's birthday today was celebrated with a deluge of greetings from every section of the country.

Looking forward to the birthday party tonight will be thousands of partygoers who will celebrate the 52nd birthday of the President. The President's birthday celebration is a talk over the air at 11:20 p. m. E. S. T.

Mail and express trucks and telegraph wires brought greetings that overflowed the workers there.

Telegraph greetings were estimated at 150,000. Birthday cards for the day were calculated to total another 100,000. Bundles carried all manner of gifts were stacked high in the executive office. Birthday cakes were on about every desk.

Smiling and laughing at the expressions, Mr. Roosevelt went to his desk as usual and appeared in the best of health on his first birthday in the White House.

He was interested particularly in the arrangements privately made for the birthday ball to be given for the Warm Springs, Ga., foundation fund for the treatment of infantile paralysis victims.

Zero Weather Halts CWA Work in City Commission Orders Suspended by Stay Of Judge Loughran

Appellate Division Must Review Orders of Public Service Commission in Gas and Electric Case Before They Become Effective

Supreme Court Justice John T. Loughran today granted the application of the Queens Borough Gas & Electric Corporation for an order staying and suspending the orders of the Public Service Commission, pending a review thereof by the Appellate Division.

The application was made to restrain the commission from putting into effect a temporary electric rate which decreases the electric rate of the company 15 percent, pending determination of a permanent order for review in the Appellate Division.

Justice Loughran in a memorandum states in brief: "The special term is not required, and indeed is without competent authority, to review the order of the commission. Pending review by the Appellate Division, the court has power to grant a stay and to suspend the operation of the order of the commission."

The Queens Borough Gas & Electric Corporation has submitted evidence that the rate is unduly low and that the company is suffering financial loss.

French Red Tape Screens Theft Says Chautemps In Stavisky Case

By ALEXANDER H. CHIL.

Paris (AP) — French red tape largely is blamed by Camille Chautemps for the Stavisky pawnshop scandal which shook the cabinet and stirred the French republic as few things have done since the war.

Chautemps felt it was his duty to do this that he undertook a staggering job of administrative reform in the police and judicial departments.

System Hinders Officials

In a country where paying a gas bill involves a bewildering pile of documents, the job of simplifying "paperwork" as the French call it, is one that is bound to challenge any man's patience.

Chautemps admitted frankly to the chamber of deputies that Stavisky wigged his way from one shady deal to the next chiefly because the French administrative system never was able to catch up with him.

He explained there are three agencies charged with inspecting financial matters. The first is in the hands of the courts, the second is controlled by the "surte generale," or secret service, while the third is controlled by the local police.

Departments Pass Buck

"It happens that when a case comes up, each one of these agencies writes a report," said Chautemps. "These reports are transmitted from one to another of the investigating agencies, each one counting on the other to do something, but frequently nothing is done."

Stavisky, working upon the mayor of Bayonne, gained control of the municipal pawnshop, an institution empowered to issue bonds guaranteed by pawned jewels and other valuables. His system was to sell bonds of much higher face value than shown by the office stubs.

There were annual inspections by governmental agencies but the fraud was not detected until December. Then it was discovered that bonds for $1,500,000 more than the pawnshop record showed had been presented for redemption.

It has been estimated that the Bayonne operations brought Stavisky more than $30,000,000. He had in the background a deal for marketing depreciated bonds issued to Hun-

Sheltered In Bureaucratic Maze

Serge Alexandre Stavisky (inset), the arch swindler who bilked the French public out of $30,000,000 by fraudulent bonds, escaped earlier detection because French red tape hindered officials, says Camille Chautemps, whose cabinet had to hear the brunt of the scandal which followed revelations of the fraud.

Milliners Present the Napoleonic Hat

Copyright, 1934, by Fairchild.

At lower right, is an example of the featured shape in the new showing of Agnes, easily traceable to the headgear of the first French Emperor, and above it is a modification of the same idea. The first is done in a wool straw in the lighter of the chevron, or knight, blue, with the top of the brim cut away at the sides to form ribbons which tie at back. This hat is cut away at back instead of turning up. The one above it turns up at back as well as front and is called "Papillon" because of the butterfly of pastel feathers in light blue on the dark blue straw, which is a fine fancy braid; a narrow grosgrain of the darker knight blue goes around the top of the crown and makes contrast with the navy and the light blue.

The third hat, cut with crest that is fairly pressed down, is done in white organdie sprinkled with tiny tassel tufts.

Small Prints Preclaim Spring Madness

New York—Will women ever tire of prints? This is a question fabric designers are keen to have answered, negatively. But more of us are tired of prints, or think we are, because the time is not quite here when the print madness assails us. It's when spring is in the air that one feels impelled to express oneself colorfully and otherwise.

Those who are determined to get us into print early are going to be satisfied if we appear in small prints. In fact, it is the smaller prints that are being highlighted, especially those with a black background.

If you like tiny florals or are willing to go dotty, well and good, if not you can be put behind bars—and like it. The new stripes, plaids, and cross-bar effects are very fresh and springlike on taffetas, a fabric which, considering its past, has a brilliant future.

It manifests itself first, and most importantly in blouses. Those with a tiny metal star, or dot or dash or something, are very well liked in black or in bright shades, for if one may jump at conclusions at this early date, blouses are determined to be gay. It's what's above the table that counts apparently. Since we are all supposed to be draped over tables or lined up to bars, it naturally comes to pass that we are particularly anxious to beguile from the waist up. Hats and blouses then must be gay companions for the popular indoor sports.

There is just nothing new about prints trimmed with plain fabrics, excepting, of course, the manner in which the plain fabrics are handled. The model sketched shows an interesting version of the idea, and indicates the continued preference for high necklines. There is a definite let down of the evening décolletage however. It's a part of the formal picture, the neckline lowered to the limit of good taste. One may however still wear the high cut bodice providing it is cut away to nothing at the back.

H. A. Tweedie, who since August 26 has been associated with R. A. McAndrew in the conduct of the new men's wear store at 275 Fair street, under the name Tweedie-McAndrew, will again enter the employ of Montgomery Ward & Co., taking over the management of one of their stores in one of the larger cities.

Mr. Tweedie came to Kingston in 1929, at the time of the organization of the Montgomery Ward store on Fair street, opening up the new store as manager and remaining in that capacity until August, 1933, when he formed a partnership with Mr. McAndrew, the two opening the new men's wear store. The new venture has proven most successful and both Mr. Tweedie and Mr. McAndrew speak with appreciation of the partnership that has been given them and the friends the store has made. The business at 275 Fair street will be continued by Mr. McAndrew, under the same firm name.

Mr. Tweedie is making a change because he finds the offer made to him by Montgomery Ward too attractive to refuse. He will, however, retain his home in Kingston, where he is a member of the Kiwanis Club, and where he and Mrs. Tweedie have made many friends and formed pleasant social connections which they would be very reluctant to leave.

Mr. Tweedie will enter upon the duties of his new position about February 10.

Cold Here? Pshaw Listen to Old Bill

Shawangunk Mountain Trapper Steps Into Town to Buy Some Axes and Tells of Cold That Is Out—Zero Weather Continues Here.

"Jumping grasshoppers," said Old Bill Leedig, Shawangunk Mountain trapper and hunter, this morning, "you folks here in the city don't know when it is cold. It makes me laugh to see you go around swinging your arms and holding on to your ears when it is only zero weather here."

Old Bill had dropped into town to buy some new axes. He said he had worn out all his axes the past day or so battling ice in the mountains around his shack. Hear Old Bill tell it: "Cold here, bah, you orber been along with me the past few days in the mountains. Boy, then you could talk about cold what is cold."

"The other morning I got up to go out and get some water from the well, and whether you believe it or not my breath froze so fast in front of me that it made a regular wall of ice, and in order to get to the well I had to go back in the shack and get an axe and cut my way through my frozen breath. Wall I wore out two axes and my best axe I had to use to cut my way down the mountain to get into town to buy me a new supply."

"Funny thing about this cold up there was that it made me use some terrible language while cutting my way through my frozen breath. I did not know I was saying anything extra strong until I got disgusted at being unable to get to the well and carved myself a slab of my frozen breath and took it back and put it in the pot on the stove to melt it up for water to wash my face and hands."

"Then I sat about getting myself some breakfast and suddenly I heard a voice saying: 'Ding, dang, ding, weather anyhow.' Of course it was stronger language than that, but this is a family paper and I know you wouldn't print just what the words actually were."

"Wall I suddenly was some startled to hear my voice speaking and I had not opened my mouth. Well the voice continued to rattle off a string of cuss words a yard long. I kinder thought maybe I had been sampling too much apple, and was imagining things. Then, whether you believe it or not, I made the discovery that my voice was coming from the pot on the stove."

"Yes sir my voice had become imprisoned in that there slab of ice and as it melted it released the sound."

"Wall I gotter be getting along now but don't tell me it is cold here."

Well, whether Old Bill thought it was cold or not residents of Kingston this morning awoke to find close to zero weather still enveloping the city, although it was not quite as cold as it was Monday.

TORRENTIAL LEGISLATION

Fifty the poor legislators these days. Everywhere, in city councils, in state legislatures and in Congress, he is afloat in a torrent. The situation at Washington especially is difficult, because every move, every speech, every vote, is so much in the public eye, feeling is so intense, and there is an election coming next fall.

Senators and representatives are continually pulled in two directions. There is the big demand for members of the dominant party to be loyal to the administration in deference to a popular demand and an urgent need. At the same time there are warnings against reckless expenditure, against untried policies, against administration supporters making themselves "mere rubber stamps," against loss of constitutional rights by the House and Senate, against members of the minority neglecting party principles and the traditional duty of criticism.

The general result is that Congress and other legislative bodies go along with whatever the public seems to be demanding, following whatever leadership presents that demand clearly and boldly. All go with the stream. Only a few try to swim upstream. Just now the public seems to demand the spending of money. They are swept along with the rest. And history may tell our children more about it than we know how. Will it be a tale of disaster?

HOPE IN CUBA.

The Cuban situation looks more cheerful since Carlos Mendiesta, fourth experimental president succeeding Machado, took office. He is an older and more experienced man than his predecessors. He seems to have stronger support on the island than the others have had, from organized groups and from the general public. Jefferson Caffery, who has been in Havana as President Roosevelt's personal representative, has made a favorable report to Secretary of State Hull. Washington opinion is more approving and optimistic than it has been for months.

The whole foreign diplomatic corps at Havana is said to have agreed on January 15 to ask their governments to recognize Mendiesta as soon as he shall have completed his cabinet. That simplifies the situation for the United States. It is well for our government, in view of present Latin-American opinion, to make no more suggesting dictation to Cuba. President Mendiesta favors a new bilateral treaty with the United States, abolishing the Platt amendment which gives this country the right of intervention. American opinion will probably approve such a step.

PAN-AMERICAN UNITY

Recognition of the new Cuban government, headed by Mendiesta, brings to a satisfactory close a worrisome chapter in the relations of the United States and Cuba. The two countries can go on from here with better feeling and clearer understanding. Mendiesta seems to command the confidence of more factions in Cuba than any of his short-lived predecessors since the expulsion of Machado. He also seems to be a man that the government at Washington can work with. The next move is to abolish or modify the Platt Amendment, so that we shall no longer feel any political responsibility in Cuba, and Cuba will no longer fear American intervention.

The new surge of good will between the United States and all Latin-America is furthered by this action. Our Latin neighbors are now almost convinced that when we renounce dollar diplomacy and the big stick, we mean it. Our official words have reassured the other republics; but actions speak louder than words. Friendship, peace, profit and vast

NIGHT ATTACK

"What cargo is that?" asked Grahame, still pondering on the strangeness of this subofficial transaction.

"Cocaine," said Ortega. "It is very profitable. From Progress it is taken to the United States."

They were seated at the table smoking over the remnants of their meal. Grahame threw his cigar at Ortega.

"I am not interested in dope running," he said. "But I would like to investigate the country back of here. You need not be concerned," he continued, half contemptuously as he saw Ortega's face darken. "You'll tangle yourself up sooner or later. No need for me to interfere."

Ortega rose and stood facing Grahame. Through the open door came the sounds of his two companions as they busied themselves stacking the cases in an adjoining shack.

"You will leave with me in the morning," said Ortega distinctly. His hands hung loosely at his sides. Grahame remained seated, but hitched his chair around so that his feet were clear of the table.

"I stay here."

"As you will." The Mexican's hand flashed to his holster. Grahame lashed forward with his leg. Ortega cried out in pain as the toe of the heavy boot snapped against his wrist. His gun dropped to the floor and Grahame covered it with his foot.

"Next time," said Grahame, "you'll be really sorry."

He picked up the heavy revolver and tossed it on the table. Ortega glowered at him, his teeth bared in a half snarl. He held his wrist tightly with his other hand.

Grahame took up the revolver from the table and slipped it into his pocket. He strode to the door and turned. "I'm sleeping with your cargo tonight," he smiled a little grimly. "In the event I don't see you in the morning, adios."

HE GATHERED his duologue at the launch and took it to the building where the arms were stacked. He unrolled his hammock and lashed it in place. He lay down fully dressed with his automatic ready beneath his hand and his flashlight in the other.

He could see a light glowing through the thatch from the other building, and heard the voices of the three as a low murmur. Later he heard them moving about outside.

The engine of the launch coughed and settled to a steady thrumming. Evidently they were not waiting for the morning's light to leave by. His thought was confirmed when he heard the slow grind of the reverse gear, and the quick chug of the launch under way.

The beat of the engine lessened, then grew fainter as distance swallowed its sound.

Grahame relaxed and closed his eyes. He dozed fitfully, however, his mind restless and wary. Finally he slept.

Ortega's hand flashed to his holster.

Two figures loomed in the square made by the doorway, but about five yards distant from it.

Grahame threw himself from the hammock as two guns spat flame. He heard the thud of the bullets hitting the cases, then his own gun began to jump in his hand.

Above the crashes he heard one of the men cry out, then both melted from his gun sights. He jumped to the doorway. The two were fleeing toward the clearing's edge. He sighted on the back of the larger of the fleeing men, then lowered his gun.

He shrugged his shoulders and turned to the boy standing beside him.

"How are you, Juan?" he asked, throwing an arm over the lad's shoulders.

"I am all right," he drew a deep breath. "But very frightened, señor."

Frank grinned. "Well, so was I. But I suspect not half so much as our two friends."

He looked at the boy appraisingly, who gazed back at him with candid eyes. Despite the young fellow's assurance that he had been afraid, there was no trace of timidity in that straightforward look.

Frank said, "How old are you, Juan?"

"Sixteen, señor."

"Do you know the jungle back there?" He waved his arm in a direction away from the coast. "Have you ever been in there?"

"A little, señor. To shoot deer, or to trap the wild turkey."

"Would you go in there with me—even if it will take weeks to go only a few miles?"

Juan said thoughtfully: "It is very dangerous, señor. I would advise you not to go."

Vaguely Frank was disappointed. He said heartily: "Then you would rather not go with me. But that is all right. Here . . . I will give you some money, muchacho, for what you did for me this night, and you can head back toward the coast when you wish."

Again Juan gave him that level look.

"I did not say I would not go, señor. I said that it was dangerous."

He picked up the heavy revolver and tossed it on the table. Ortega glowered at him, his teeth bared in a half snarl. He held his wrist tightly with his other hand.

Grahame took up the revolver from the table and slipped it into his pocket. He strode to the door and turned. "I'm sleeping with your cargo tonight," he smiled a little grimly. "In the event I don't see you in the morning, adios."

HE GATHERED his duologue at the launch and took it to the building where the arms were stacked. He unrolled his hammock and lashed it in place. He lay down fully dressed with his automatic ready beneath his hand and his flashlight in the other.

He could see a light glowing through the thatch from the other building, and heard the voices of the three as a low murmur. Later he heard them moving about outside.

The engine of the launch coughed and settled to a steady thrumming. Evidently they were not waiting for the morning's light to leave by. His thought was confirmed when he heard the slow grind of the reverse gear, and the quick chug of the launch under way.

The beat of the engine lessened, then grew fainter as distance swallowed its sound.

Grahame relaxed and closed his eyes. He dozed fitfully, however, his mind restless and wary. Finally he slept.

Ortega's hand flashed to his holster.

Two figures loomed in the square made by the doorway, but about five yards distant from it.

Grahame threw himself from the hammock as two guns spat flame. He heard the thud of the bullets hitting the cases, then his own gun began to jump in his hand.

Above the crashes he heard one of the men cry out, then both melted from his gun sights. He jumped to the doorway. The two were fleeing toward the clearing's edge. He sighted on the back of the larger of the fleeing men, then lowered his gun.

He shrugged his shoulders and turned to the boy standing beside him.

"How are you, Juan?" he asked, throwing an arm over the lad's shoulders.

"I am all right," he drew a deep breath. "But very frightened, señor."

Frank grinned. "Well, so was I. But I suspect not half so much as our two friends."

He looked at the boy appraisingly, who gazed back at him with candid eyes. Despite the

Swedes Adopt Much From America

What does the rest of the world think of America? This is the sixth of a series of eight articles summarizing the various impressions.

By ELMER W. PETERSON

Stockholm (P)—The man on the curb in Sweden, more responsive to American influence in his every-day life than he will admit voluntarily, looks westward across the Atlantic with a certain amount of confusion. He is uncertain whether to accept the United States as being fundamentally—

(1) SENSATIONAL: addicted to gangsters, skyscrapers, kidnappings, the West slang, bizarre contests to determine the most perfect back, marriages on roller skates or in airplanes, and payment of fabulous salaries to such persons as Greta Gustafsson Garbo, originally of Sweden.

(2) CREATIVE: building up something quite new in the way of life and living, and giving forth a flood of ideas on clothes, machinery, transportation, communication, amusement, and the like.

(3) EXPERIMENTAL: at present establishing a close and complimentary kinship with Sweden (and Scandinavia in general) through political, social and economic experimentation.

American "Rush" Amazes

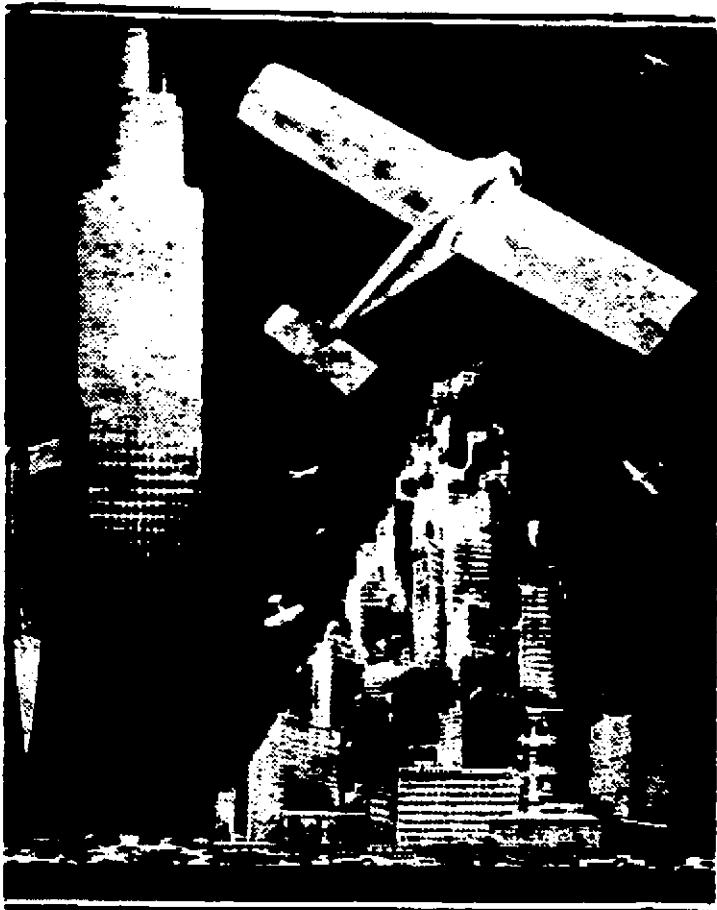

While protesting vigorously at accusations of so-called "Americanization" modern Sweden manages, nevertheless, to give good evidence of westward-looking admiration by riding almost exclusively in American automobiles, reading American literature ranging from the "confession" magazine type to Nobel prize winner Sinclair Lewis, popularizing American plays—as many as four were running simultaneously recently in Stockholm theatres—and playing American music extensively in restaurants and dance halls.

American "fads," American "wealth," and American "biggest and best," are popular subject matter for irony and humor in the Swedish press and the "rush" of American living is difficult of understanding, especially for the older generation.

There is a marked belief, moreover, that America is lacking in "culture and tradition," although the younger generation, less critical, can become wildly enthusiastic over a visiting jazz orchestra from New York.

Undertone Of Understanding

Basically, however, as reflected in

To peaceful Sweden big city life in America is a startling confusion of skyscrapers, gangsters and desire to get somewhere in a hurry. This cover from the Swedish magazine "Sunt Fornuft," drawn by Prof. Gustaf Olof Hjortberg, portrays America as an ever-pyramiding mass of stone, concrete and steel. Airplanes and the stream of motor cars symbolize the "speed" of American life, while the dagger and revolver to the left suggest the gangster threat to law and order.

The Swedish press, Sweden feels herself closer to America than other European countries, conscious that there is no political coloring to her attitude. Although a large percentage of news from America is of the sensational variety, and although most of the analytical comment feeds in from English and German newspapers, there is a pronounced undertone of respect and understanding.

Wide discussion of certain of Sweden's institutional achievements as being worthy of consideration in America, such as the Bratt system of liquor control, the Swedish program of managed currency, and the like, has done much, moreover, to foster a feeling that this country has much in common with the United States.

Socialist Press Admiring

Socialist Sweden in particular finds gratification in the present program of the Roosevelt administration and the socialist press is openly pleased and admiring.

Some at least of the misunderstanding which exists regarding Americans is due to the absence of high-pressure publicity methods in Sweden, with the result that news of Americans competing in pancake-eating contests and the like is too often received and accepted at face value. American motion pictures, likewise, not infrequently are taken seriously as being a cross-section of actual life in America.

Proud of Lindbergh

One of Sweden's chief sources of pride, on the other hand, is the list of Americans with Swedish blood, such as Colonel Charles Lindbergh, who have won international fame. In addition to Colonel Lindbergh, Americans of unusual popularity in Sweden include a long list of motion picture stars, especially such comedy artists as Laurel and Hardy. A number of American writers are widely popular. President Roosevelt is, on the whole, held in high esteem.

Hours Arranged for Dog Heaven Trips

Hours were arranged Monday evening by the board of public works when owners of pets may have their animals, who they desire to be rid of, routed to dog heaven. An engineer will be in charge of the dog heaven station—known as the gas-cutter—on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 1 to 4 o'clock in the afternoon. This applies only to dogs and cats who are city owned. Outsiders desiring to send an unwanted animal to dog heaven will have to buy a ticket; the cost is a dollar, and it's a one-way trip.

Opium Away Back When

Homer's use of "nephentes," the drug of forgetfulness, was already so well known in his day that the first discovery of the effects of opium must be dated back to a still earlier time.

PLANS COMPLETED FOR CONFERENCE OF YOUTH

Plans are nearly completed for the eleventh annual State Youth Conference at Rochester, New York, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, February 16, 17 and 18. This is the only state gathering of young people throughout the year at which young people of all denominations and all representing Christian Endeavor, Epworth Leagues, Luther League, Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. Clubs, DeMolay Auxiliaries and other clubs of youth people, joined throughout the state meet together to discuss methods of making their personal life and the life of those with whom they come in contact more useful. A good representation from Ulster county is planning to attend.

Delegates to the conference will be housed in the Powers and the Rochester Hotels, girls in one, the boys in the other. A nominal registration fee has been fixed which will include the banquet on Saturday evening, and all program expenses.

Speakers to the conference have been chosen for their knowledge of the subjects to be presented. Forum interest groups will enable the various delegates to discuss together the topics they hear about and to make definite conclusions to bring home with them. Spare time between sessions and during dinner hours will be used by those who come in "interest" trips through the city and its industries.

Registration blanks may be secured from Kimbol Pirie, who is area director for this area, from Miss Lillian Herdman at the Y. W. C. A., or from Burt Van Deusen at

Forms For Making Returns

Forms for filing returns of income for 1933 have been sent to persons who filed returns last year. Failure to receive a form, however, does not relieve a taxpayer of his obligation to file his return and pay the tax on time on or before March 15 if the return is made on the calendar year basis, as is the case with most individuals.

Forms may be obtained upon request, written or personal, from the offices of collectors of internal revenue and deputy collectors. Persons whose net income for 1933 was derived chiefly from salary or wages and was not in excess of $5,000 should make their returns on form 1040A, a single sheet. Persons whose net income was in excess of $5,000, or, regardless of amount, was derived from a business, profession, rents or sale of property, are required to use a larger form, 1040. Full-

BIG GROWTH SHOWN IN POSTAL SAVINGS

Deposits increase to More Than Billion Dollars.

Washington.—The United States government, the biggest banking institution in the country, is doing a rushing business in all departments. In the savings department the deposits have more than tripled in two years.

Figures revealed in Postmaster General Farley's annual report illustrate the distrust of private banking institutions that caused hordes of people to entrust their savings to Uncle Sam. On July 1, 1932, there were deposits aggregating barely more than $300,000,000 in the postal savings deposits. A year later there were 1,545,190 depositors with deposits totaling $784,920,623.

By July 1, 1933, there were 2,342,133 postal savings depositors with deposits aggregating $1,187,196,208. In addition there was on hand $18,502,093 due depositors, $63,587 due holders of outstanding postal savings stamps, and $2,835 in unclaimed deposits.

There were 7,883 depositaries, a net increase of 350 during the 1933 fiscal year.

Mr. Farley reported a postal service deficit for 1933 of $112,374,892. Taking into account, however, $45,264,945 for shipping and commercial aviation subventions, $15,835,005 representing the cost of handling mail for congress, the Executive departments, and the courts, and a few other items, the postmaster general found the true deficit for the postal service to the public to be $50,883,005, one-third what it was the preceding year.

Despite the falling off in revenue due to the reduction of local postage from 3 to 2 cents, Mr. Farley said that economies would bring the postal service budget into "approximate balance" this fiscal year.

Log Cabin Mill Printed $3,000,000 Money

West Chester, Pa.—Current talk of inflation has revived tales of the "million-dollar town" of a previous inflation period. It is the community of Glen Mills, Delaware county, which flourished in Civil war days when paper money with a face value of $3,000,000 was made there in a log cabin mill for Abraham Lincoln's government.

The greenbacks were made by the "Government Bank-Note Paper Works" owned by the Wilcox family and famous for 150 years for its bank paper. The government stamps and bonds, used to finance the government during the Civil war period, were made there. It is estimated that $440,000,000 in greenbacks, $300,000,000 in fractional currency, $780,000,000 in revenue stamps, and $1,100,000,000 in government bonds were issued by the government to finance the war, and most of the paper was made at Glen Mills.

Youth Wins 111 Contest Awards in Nine Months

Boston, Mass.—Contesting, it appears, is America's newest hobby. Ralph Stueber of Boston is the publisher of a new magazine designed to keep contest addicts in close touch with contests throughout the land.

Volume 1, No. 1, of this novel publication reveals that one Massachusetts youth, entering every contest he heard of, won no less than 111 contest awards during a nine month period; that 40 families in New York earn a living by contests, and that several experts do nothing but promote contests.

Contests listed offer a variety of prizes ranging from electric refrigerators, Irish terriers, trips to the West Indies, and the like, to cash awards such as the $20 offered by Massachusetts Society of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals for the names of cat abandoners.

Glasgow, Scotland, had a death rate of 13.4 in 1933, the lowest on record.

New Dutch Land

The Polders and the IJsselmeer Once Were the Zuyder Zee.

WITH the recent completion of the 20-mile dike, shutting out the North sea, the Zuider Zee (South sea) becomes a lake called the IJsselmeer. It is a much smaller body of water because 500,000 acres of the old Zuider Zee bed are being reclaimed to furnish needed land for The Netherlands' fast growing population.

The Zuider Zee itself was a small lake fed by a mouth of the Rhine river in pre-Roman days, discharging its surplus water through four or five small creeks into the North sea. Later it spread itself over the surrounding region. Nobody could prevent its flooding its way from the center outward through swampy country, nor could anybody in those days keep the North sea from plunging its breakers into the creeks, undermining their banks and widening their channels.

But the area of dry land between the slowly rising lake and the narrow strip of sand dunes along the North sea shore, never large enough to feed an ever-increasing population, soon became too small for comfort. Besides, by conquering others, some of the warring counts and barons succeeded in assuming authority over parts of the country large enough to crystallize the necessary nuclei of civilization and to try experiments in wholesale engineering.

About the time matters were put right in the western part of the country, there was a succession of gales from the northwest, and when they had calmed down Lake Flevo (for so it was called) and the North sea had combined into an inland sea covering an area of about 1,000,000 acres, from which only two diluvial hills protruded: the islands of Urk and Wieringen. The narrow belt of sand dunes had been broken into a string of small islands by deep and widening channels, through which the tidal streams surged in and out every 24 hours.

There the Dutch were, with a young and spirited Mediterranean right in the place where every other self-respecting country has its center!

They made an inland sea. "What are we to do with it?" people asked one another on that memorable February morning when at last the Azores anti-cyclone reassured itself, and the sun rose over a choppy sea covered with the timber and straw of many houses—as houses went in those days—and a lot of bodies, too. The flooded area had been a densely populated stretch of country yielding splendid crops quite in a natural way.

Of course, they could not do anything with their new-born Zuider Zee (South sea), but they took jolly good care at least that it did not grow into an ocean. They put a big dam around it, right on the spot where the water had been highest, and tried to forget their quarrels when a fresh string of depressions was felt moving across Atlantic. They kept their dike in order before all other things, and even from time to time reclaimed muddy banks and bays and what are called "wheels"—i. e., the circumference of eddies forming on the inside of a flooded stretch of higher land.

Comparison of a map of 1400 with one of 1900 discloses that a lot had been done by those gangs of navvies—both medieval and modern—and by the southwesterly winds carefully trained to turn Dutch four-bladed mills to restore a streamline-like quality to the ragged boundaries of the Zuider Zee.

For five or six centuries at least Dutch engineers had to be content with keeping the Zuider Zee within bounds and improving the windmill-driven drainage system of the low-lying districts. Between wars, they amused themselves by thinking out plans for reversing the circulation of water for purposes of inundation, thereby exacting watchdog service, as it were, from "the savage wolf gnawing at the heart of Holland," as some poet puts it. In this way they got rid of a good many invading armies, not by drowning them—merely wetting them thoroughly, say, up to the armpits.

Start of the Reclamation. Besides keeping the dikes in repair under the co-operative scheme still in existence, those Seventeenth-century Dutchmen tried reclaiming bays and lakes, rather clumsily at first, but gaining experience as the interesting work went on, and ways and means were improved gradually. The four big lakes, Panner, Bernster, Schermer

About the Folks

More Land Needed.
Like Manhattan, the Netherlands now really had become much too crowded. Only in the Netherlands it was not room for shops and offices that people wanted; it was home-lands and arable land. Far-seeing economists pointed out that something more had to be done. Why not get the Zuider Zee bottom ready to receive the eighth million?

In Dr. C. Lely the Dutch nation, in 1896, found the man it needed to turn it from its phase of stilted speculation into one of definite prospecting—and so on to the final execution of his comprehensive plan of 1891: to connect North Holland with Friesland by a heavy dam 90 yards wide and 20 miles in length, separating the waters of the North sea and the Zuider Zee; to inclose four of the most fertile parts of the resulting basin by smaller dams; and to put several big pumping stations to work to finish the reclaiming job.

When Babies Take Their Naps

By ANNE CAMPBELL

OUR neighborhood, when afternoon finds down its golden banner, is quiet as a day in June. Quite in the rustic manner? There are no eager, laughing girls. No lanky little chaps. To tease them and to pull their curls. When babies take their naps?

All morning they run up and down our happy neighborhood. And many of the mothers frown. And wish they would be good! They run and run, and never rest. Till mother's voice sounds "Taps!" And brings the time we like the best. When babies take their naps!

There is no neighborhood so gay As this, where children run. We love to see them as they play. Their bright heads in the sun. But still it is a pleasant fall. When in their mothers' laps They're snug to sleep. . . . It's wonderful When babies take their naps!

Saving money this month
—You have another guess coming....!"

A N old custom, these January Sales, a great way to save money—even in a normal year.

But 1934 isn't a normal year. The prices of silk and cotton and chinaware and fur coats and galoshes and bridge lamps stand still, more or less, in a normal year.

This year of 1934, prices aren't standing still. They're going up—lifted by their own boot-straps, perhaps—but still going up!

And that's why these January clearances this year offer you the chance of a life-time. Because—in the face of these rising prices—sale prices are down! Way down—for your local merchants bought goods when prices were considerably lower than they are today.

All this is news—big, money-saving news to you. That's why your merchants are telling you all about it—item for item and "buy for buy" in a place where you're bound to see and read and SAVE—every day in the pages of the Freeman!

"D. T." Snake Really

Existed in Reptile

Kernville, Calif.—A snake such as is associated usually with bad dreams was found near here recently by Bill Walker, Jr., of Kernville.

The reptile, a rattlesnake, was six feet long, weighed 2½ pounds, and it was a male. Its eyes were pink and its body a mottled pink and red.

The snake's body was sent to the University of Southern California for study.

SHE SEEKS ROMANCE;
BOSSES SEWER GANGBroken Dreams Force Girl to Take Lowly Job.

Watson, Ill.—Her dream of teaching English in far-away Hawaii shattered, Miss Juanita Martin has now returned to her home here as a successful boss of a construction gang.

Since girlhood, Juanita had dreamed her dreams of sailing to far off Isles in the western Pacific, there to enjoy gorgeous sunsets and hear dreamy music of the ukulele when not engaged in warning against split infinitives and verbosity.

While in high school, Juanita spent one summer vacation assisting her father, E. D. Martin, in building a sewage disposal line between North Aurora and Aurora, Ill. So employed, she gained valuable experience and after her graduation from the Nixon township school, her father obtained a contract for construction of a $112,000 sewage disposal plant at Geneva only to find himself unable to direct the work.

Juanita, however, jumped into the breach, signing contracts, hiring men, purchasing materials and taking over the job as active boss. She directed her men with the same vim and tact that she had used in dealing with bankers and government officials and when the job was done the federal inspector detailed to look over it declared that it compared favorably with the best concrete work in the state of Illinois.

On one occasion, when work was halted due to lack of dynamite needed to blast away an obstruction, Juanita leaped into a monster auto truck, loaded 20 miles to Lemont, secured the needed explosive and hurried back in time for the work to proceed without a hitch.

Another time, she was forced to make a hurried trip to Washington to obtain a loan on securities to obtain funds to complete the job.

Although Juanita was forced to forget her dreams of the Hawaiian Islands, she did have the satisfaction of seeing a pretty park with a rock garden and waterfall publicly dedicated and christened "Juanita Park" by the mayor of Aurora, Ill., in her honor.

Consience Brings Back
Money Lost Six Years Ago

Waycross, Ga.—Clarence McIntosh has recovered the value of the contents of a pocketbook he lost in 1927. The purse fell from his pocket on the porch of the Y. M. C. A. building and, failing to find it, he promptly forgot about it.

A few days ago a Waycross man, who has been living in another city, sought Mr. McIntosh and said he had picked up the pocketbook. "I was desperately in need of money," he said, "and your cash helped me to get out of town to find a job."

Neither remembered what the amount was, so the loss was compromised for $10.

Friends Discover Both
Married the Same Girl

Los Angeles.—Seeking an annulment of his marriage to Ruth Cleo Stackelberg, Richard Stackelberg explained to the judge:

"I was riding with Glen Martin, a friend, one day when my wife passed us in another car and waved. Martin waved back, so I asked him: 'Do you know that woman?'"

"Sure, that's my wife," Martin told me.

Martin explained they had been married and never divorced. Stackelberg got the annulment.

Defective Motor Lands
Flyer in State Prison

Joliet, Ill.—Clarton Keigher was returning to his Ottawa (Ill.) home from Chicago in his airplane when the motor stalled. Only one spot appeared suitable for a landing.

To his amazement, six men came running toward him and each of them had a rifle.

"Go on, you can't land here. Get out, and get quick," one of the men told him. "It's against the rules."

Keigher had landed inside the state prison grounds. He left as quickly as he could repair the motor.

Bantam Chicken Sings
Songs on Top of Piano

Alto, Ariz.—A bantam hen that sings is the proud possession of Mrs. Rita Wallenstein.

The hen, Pimp, has performed many times, according to Mrs. Wallenstein, and her vocal talents apparently are unlimited.

When Mrs. Wallenstein plays her piano Pimp will walk back and forth on top of the instrument "singing" in perfect time with the music.

The value of foreign exports shipped from Charleston, S. C., last year gained more than 20 per cent over the preceding year.

A Washington Daybook

By HERBERT PLUMMER

WASHINGTON.—It begins to look as if democratic members of congress have about exhausted their bag of tricks in attempts to force the administration into doing something about patronage.

There seems to be a note of resignation discernible in their latest move in this direction.

Twenty-five members of the house have signed a petition to force a caucus for discussion of patronage which calls for creation of a committee to confer with the President and tell him of "the exact situation as we see it."

There's nothing belligerent in the expression of their attitude. In fact, the member who circulated the petition and obtained the required number of signatures within a few hours was quick to point out:

"It be (the President) decides to turn us down, I for one, still will support him 100 per cent."

They've Tried Before

THIS is not the first time a "committee" has been appointed to confer with the President. During the special session, house democrats, in desperation voted to put their case up to him.

It didn't avail them much then. The best-informed, among them

Democratic Leader BYRNE, don't think it will now.

Still, you can't blame them for trying. One doesn't have to be a political expert to appreciate the tough spot they're in.

The pressure from patronage seekers, high and low, has decreased little since March 4. In some quarters demands are being made with increasing emphasis.

A great number of appointments have been made, but the disturbing thing from the patronage viewpoint is that there are hundreds of jobs now being held by republicans which "deserving democrats" believe rightfully should be their own.

The Harmony Argument

THE argument is advanced that many federal jobs are being held by those who, down in their hearts, are not in sympathy with either the laws passed by congress or the manner in which they are administered by a democratic President.

The result, it is argued, cannot but fail to work a detriment both to the party and to the administration's program.

Sooner or later, perhaps, something will have to be done about such a situation. In ordinary times probably it never would have prevailed, but since it does those best informed seem to think it will require some time for solution.
